[Use of biologic prophylaxis in surgery of the stomach and the oesophagus]. The authors make an analysis of the literature concerning a biological prophylaxis of postoperative complications in surgical intervention of stomach and oesophagus. The main points of the biological prophylaxis, as well as the indications and contraindications of these methods, are considered. The results of our own trials are presented, in which the intravenous infusion of immune globulines after surgical intervention of the oesophagus was used for the prevention of oesophageal anastomoses insufficiency. In the authors' opinion, the proteinaceous prophylaxis--with the use of immunoglobulines--is most appropriate for surgical intervention of stomach and oesophagus. Q: Permissions to post answers (like SF) The user @Gilles has posted a very useful answer on Stack Overflow which is itself based on the work of @jslake (you should go read his post as well! [I am not affiliated, apart from a passing interest]) I have come across a couple of questions on Stack Overflow where we are trying to answer (with the same minor differences) the same question which have received different answers, not that I disagree with the answers themselves, but it does demonstrate that the questions are - for example - identical in terms of the data used (in this case I suppose it was one question on a regular computer and a question on a touchscreen computer). When we come across a question where the answers are different, is it permissible to post an answer based on the same code with a different (but if I understand correctly equivalent) set of parameters, but with the commentary provided as well (ex. not just the code) A: If that information is used in the same way and adds to the overall discussion, it's OK. Just post it in a way that indicates that it's a different answer, and clarify in the end that it's based on the same data. Note, however, that making changes to the same code and posting as two separate answers is not necessarily a good thing. There's no clear implication that they were posted by the same person. If they are posted by the same person, that's fine, but it should be stated in the answer that the change is the same. Q: How to convert all file within folder into title case in

In 2009, the club rejoined with the club Maccabi Bat Yam Hapoel, and was renamed to Ironi Bat Yam. The club was one of the five teams fighting for promotion in 2010–11 Liga Leumit, but was not granted a place and was relegated to Liga Bet.
