When I ask Cortana, how do I get to the blu ray player on the second TV, or the laptop on the first TV, it says "A device that is connected to the same homegroup that you want to access must be on.". FirstTV is Vista. Then I go onto Task Manager and do a search by PID.. Microsoft Product Support Services Post installation fixes for products Windows. That is a great help, thank you. Note that the homegroup is set up and seems to be working fine. So far I have it set up from the control panel and from the registry. I have tried both a given machine name and a host name as the name. But it won't connect. To be honest, I really have no idea what else to check.. This is a HP All-In-One computer.. I have tried this on 2 different PCs.. What can I do?. This is a bug to Microsoft I suppose. But how does it happen?. I found the issue.. The provided link offers service packs up through, and including, 09/06. I believe that means SP1 was not available.. Why this is not a Microsoft fix I do not know, as the registry entry is invalid. However, the fix, if I understand it correctly, is simply to remove the lines in the following section.. "HKEY_LOCAL_MACHINE\SYSTEM\CurrentControlSet\Services\Netlogon\Parameters.. If you go to start screen (win+x) and type network connections and see the netlogon entry, that is exactly what I have. That is, there is no network connections entry under computer.. Well, I have been able to connect with the HP All-In-One, but the machine name has "guest" in it and the password we use just lets me in.. This works fine, and I have it set up in the "Device Mapping" section for the com port used by the all-in-one (it's not in the normal list, as it's a serial port).. The issue is that I can't see the map or logon program.. My question 3e33713323
