We will dive deep into the features offered by Photoshop Elements, and mention the main differences between the two popular programs. Two Popular Edits Let's start with a comparison between the two programs. The two edits that I chose to show here are a lighthouses. Light House Edit in Photoshop In Photoshop we can start an editing session from File > New or simply press Alt+N. As you can see in the screenshot below, a blank canvas is prepared. Let's add a few layers to the canvas. A few guidelines to add in the canvas and a few guidelines to help us get an idea of the size of our lighthouses and of the paths that we want to draw. 5 Layers We will add 5 layers to our edit. The reason we add 5 layers is so that you can easily adjust the brightness and contrast of the image and easily change the colors we've added. To add a layer simply click on the "+" button and drag a new layer onto the canvas. The "H" icon or the Layer controls pane gives us the option to create new layers, duplicate or move a layer. Brush To change the color of a layer, we will use the Brush tool. In this instance, I will use a white brush. This is a rectangle type brush that allows you to smoothly change the color of a section of the image. When you have created a few guidelines with the Pen tool or the Line tool, you can easily create a new guide. One of the tips you should know is that you can move your guides later on to change the size of a section of the image. You can see a darker color than the previously selected layer. To change this, simply use the Brush tool to fill in some parts of the new color. Light House Edit in Photoshop Elements In Photoshop Elements, the file is already in a layered mode. So we only have to click on the "File" menu and choose "Save." There, a dialog box appears where you can set your preferences. Creating a New Layer To create a new layer, click on the + icon (A) in the top right and drag the layer icon (B). Adding a Dark Section To add a darker section, you can choose the Rectangle or Polygon tools in the top right 388ed7b0c7

This invention relates to the construction of buildings and the like, and in particular to the construction and use of acoustic panels in such buildings. Building acoustics are recognized as important in the design of buildings to avoid or reduce the use of noxious building materials. In particular, the reduced use of such materials, and in particular the use of insulating materials, are widely recognised in recent years as being key to the realization of efficient, energy-saving homes and offices. Thus, in U.S. Pat. No. 4,112,972, there is disclosed a sheet of fibreglass insulation having parallel opposite major surfaces, on each of which is disposed a gas-filled panel, thereby to provide an acoustic insulation structure. The panels themselves are made up of lengths of pipe, filled with insulation material and having a series of gas-filled compartments along one longitudinal axis. A transverse array of longitudinal gas-filled tubes is disposed perpendicularly to the lengthwise axis of the pipe, the spaces in the transverse array communicating with the compartments of the pipe. In a subsequent British patent, No. 2 118 732, the end of a prefabricated wall member was formed with an integral channel along which a gas-filled pipe could be fitted, the channel being formed with an opening at the end of the wall. In the U.S. Pat. No. 4,335,861, the same application was made of a prefabricated wall section with a transverse array of parallel elongate ducts running the length of the section, in which the ducts are filled with fibreglass insulation material. The purpose of the ducts is to bring acoustic air and therefore temperature gradients into the building to be avoided. Acoustic panel constructions of the last-mentioned type have a further advantage over earlier devices, in that the air-filled ducts can be easily and quickly fitted to a pre-fabricated wall section, and thus the need to provide a separate prefabrication means at each wall section is avoided.
