People call this "a thousand-year problem," and it's really just a thousand year hope, because if you've been paying attention for the last three thousand years, nothing lasts as long as it sounds, including solar energy. There's a certain strain of thinking about the future that takes the past as its starting point. For instance, if you ask what it's like living in the future, someone in the present might answer, "Oh, you know, with leisure time and all that, and leisure time is a luxury that only the rich have now." But if you go back far enough, you find there weren't no leisure time, just life-and-death time. If you ask what it's like living in the past, someone might answer, "Well, my great-great-great-great-great-great grandfather almost died before we learned how to smelt steel, and if he had, I wouldn't have been born because nobody would have been around to teach me what steel was." But everything old is new again. In the eighteenth century, people knew how to smelt steel, but they had no idea what a good smelting process

The study population consisted of patients with CRS who were recruited from the Oklahoma City VA Medical Center, a tertiary care center. Patients completed a comprehensive, validated survey questionnaire. The main outcome measures were patterns of CAM use, types of CRS symptoms associated with CAM use, and reasons for CAM usage. Of 211 patients identified with CRS, 101 (47%) reported using CAM during their illness. Acupuncture (93%), herbal medicine (80%), and chiropractic care (36%) were the most common CAM therapies used. Multiple other therapies were used in combination by 24% of patients. The most common reason for CAM use was the management of allergic rhinitis and sinusitis. Greater severity of CRS symptoms was significantly associated with more frequent use of both herbal medicine and acupuncture. A higher percentage of
