Endoscopes enable surgeons to gain full visualisation of the surgical site. A variety of endoscopic techniques is available to the surgeon, and all have advantages and disadvantages. Therefore, the choice of technique depends on a number of factors, and in order to be an effective and efficient choice for the patient, the surgeon must be aware of the merits and demerits of each method. The author addresses the main considerations in choosing the most appropriate technique for each individual case. Changsha, Hunan Province, China Changsha (Chinese: 长沙; pinyin: Chángshā), the capital city of Hunan Province, is also the political, cultural, educational, economic, and transportation center of the province. Changsha is the capital of Hunan Province and the third-largest city in Central China. At the 2010 census, the city had a population of 9,009,825, and the provincial urban area has 15,824,216 people. History The area of Changsha has been inhabited for over five millennia. The early Chinese Dong'ao state (东敖 or dong'ao) is assumed to have been located in this region, and the earliest written

The link has now been fixed. I don't understand why this happened, however. Please let me know if it's resolved. Thanks. Germline mutations in a family with non-X-linked mental retardation and 4q35 deletions. Mutations in several genes have been associated with non-X-linked mental retardation (MRX) syndrome and mapped to chromosomal regions containing imprinting control genes (ICs) (4q35). To identify the disease-causing genes we performed linkage studies in a large family with non-X-linked MRX syndrome and a deletion of the 4q35 region. We used high-resolution PCR and Southern blot analysis to screen for mutations in 52 genes localized in the 4q35 region. We detected two mutant alleles in one of nine patients of this family. Both alleles were different single-base pair substitutions in the four-box-like 1 (FOXL1) gene. We suggest that de novo mutations of FOXL1 may cause MRX syndrome in this family. The structure of the homeobox gene family in the cricket, Acheta domesticus. The cricket, Acheta domesticus, has a homeobox gene (Adh) with a structure that is intermediate between that of Drosophila and mammals. We report the isolation and characterization of an additional eight homeobox genes from this cricket genome. These eight homeobox genes range in size from 402 to 749 amino acids. All homeobox genes have a conserved 70-amino-acid carboxyl-terminal "homeodomain" involved in DNA binding. Other genes have conserved amino-terminal and variable carboxyl-terminal domains of putative functional significance. The structural features that distinguish these eight genes from those in other species are determined by the number and identity of amino acids in the carboxyl-terminal region. We have identified several domains that are conserved within the homeobox gene family. These domains include the helix-turn-helix motif, the leucine zipper motif, the repressor domain, and the homeodomain-associated domain. We also compared three sets of homeobox-coding sequences from the different developmental stages of the same individual insect. We found that these sequences are highly conserved, and certain levels of divergence are consistent with purifying and positive selection at the level of amino acid residues. We compared seven homeob
